and the underside sort of warms it up and give you a sense of place and a sense of home.”

Organic materials, such as limestone tile flooring, natural stone and Macassar ebony wood, and a color palette that complements the views help connect the home to its location while creating warmth, while the large windows and glass doors seamlessly connect indoors and outdoors.

Although Drewett’s father, Harold, passed away before the home was complete, he was able to see the renderings. “He couldn’t talk but he gave me some good thumbs-up,” he shares. “Not everyone gets to pay this type of tribute to their dad. I feel really fortunate.” ■

Clockwise from top left: The fireplace serves as a central anchor in the great room; looking toward the patio, the home’s aerodynamic architecture is on full display. “The fireplace helps protect the patio from visibility from the road,” says Drewett. “It provides this kind of safe harbor”; a fireplace and lounge chairs transform the primary bedroom into a peaceful sanctuary.
